Note: The original term for the Medical Section/Regimental Band is Hilfskrankenträger-Staffel (zugleich Musikkorps), which truly translated "Assistant Stretcher Bear Squad (also Musical Corps)." They were a remnant of older days when regimental bands served as stretcher bearers in combat. However, in the sense often used in the German army at this time, a soldier known as a "Krankenträger" was a soldier trained in basic first aid and assigned like the modern "corpsman." This term has been translated as "corpsman" in most of these files, but here it does not truly fit, as it is most probably that the medical training of these men was not to the same level.
